Getting Started with Photoshop

The most important thing you need to know to get started with Photoshop is how to save an image. You can use Photoshop to edit an image in its own window. Or you can use Photoshop's own file browser window. Adobe Photoshop gives you three options for saving an image, as shown in Figure 5-2. FIGURE 5-2: Choose which file-saving options to use when saving an image. The Save As dialog box To save a file in Photoshop, choose File⇒Save. You see the File browser window, which lists all the files and folders on your hard drive. (See the upcoming section "Taking advantage of the File Browser window" for details.) Choose a location in the File browser window. The Save dialog box appears, as shown in Figure 5-2. The Save image as image type option By default, Photoshop saves the original image (the one that you photographed with your camera or imported as a JPEG file) in a file format that preserves transparency. This is called TIFF, for Tagged Image File Format. TIFF files are large, so they take up a lot of storage space. They're also big files that slow down your computer. For that reason, most photographers use Photoshop to save images as JPEG files. To save an image as a JPEG, choose File⇒Save As and specify the image type as JPEG. A JPEG file is smaller than a TIFF file and preserves transparency, so you save storage space. However, the resolution is less than what's possible with a camera. So you can't really call this a high-
