Weather or not? A hurricane can be a major pain in the butt when you need to go out and try to do work or just try to relax. So let's say you're in the area of the hurricane and you need to work. Do you head inside or outside? That's probably the first thought that comes to mind. I'm going to say weather is probably your best answer. I mean if it's going to rain, then it's going to continue to rain. If it's going to be nice and sunny, you might as well do it outside. If it's going to be raining, you might as well stay inside. So really it's going to depend on the situation. Theoretically though, if you have a wooden roof you might need to rethink that, but if it's just a normal roof and you can see what's coming and know that it's not going to be heavy rain that you can simply stay out. However, there's no way you can get an idea for what's going to happen. If you're leaving for just a day trip and a hurricane is coming then you might want to stay inside. You could always stay inside, but if you're leaving for a week and it's a hurricane, you might want to get out there. If it's so bad you can't work, then get out there and do something else. I'd think weather is a good answer. If it's going to be nice and sunny, you might as well do it outside. If it's going to be raining, you might as well stay inside.
