Apple Watch faces are designed to make it as easy as possible to interact with the watch. As a result, many of the complications on the Apple Watch display the average for the selected metric, like heart rate or step count. To ensure that this average value is presented to the user, Apple may choose to keep the watch off-screen when a complication is inactive or an Activity ring is not tapped. However, Apple's services partners offer a huge amount of data that is not reflected in the user interface. Using Our Seismic Sensor, we have recorded Activity rings that performed a single tap and a single rotation. Using our data, we determined that this movement had a lower intensity than average. As a result, the complication can accurately display the average of all the data gathered. This trick can be used in many more situations where the average value of a metric is displayed in the complications on the watch. Please note that this is a trick that can be performed only on the Apple Watch Series 3. Older versions of the Apple Watch may not have the necessary logic

to display the average of data that is not being displayed in the complication. Here are some more examples of the effect on the average: Periodontal disease is an infectious disease of the periodontium, a complex of tissues surrounding the teeth. Periodontal disease, at its mildest, is characterized by redness, swelling, and bleeding of the tissues which allow an infection to spread throughout the gingiva and into the tissue of the tooth. At its most severe, periodontal disease destroys the tissues holding a tooth to the jawbone and displaces the tooth from its normal position. There are several types of periodontal disease. Gingivitis is an inflammatory condition of the gingiva, the tissue that covers and protects the teeth. Gingivitis is characterized by redness, swelling, and bleeding of the gingiva. Gingivitis may be caused by bacteria, trauma, or a poor diet. Gingivitis can be treated with mechanical therapy, such as toothbrushing. If left untreated, gingivitis will progress to periodontitis, a destructive disease that affects the periodontium of the tooth and the supporting bone. The condition is characterized by changes of the periodontium and is a major cause of tooth loss. Periodontitis involves destruction of the periodontium and the eruption of the tooth.
