from the train station to the temple, about 10-15 minutes by bus. it is a beautiful area, it is very easy to understand the famous painters of "sekigahara". if you are visiting kyoto, consider the view of sekigahara. kyoto tower is an economic high-rise development project in kyoto, japan. the office tower, which was completed in 2011, is located in the city's central area next to jr kyoto station. the building's height is 92.6 meters, making it the tallest building in kyoto, and the city's third tallest building behind the 41-meter high world trade center tower in shinjuku, tokyo and the mori tower in tokyo. the tower will serve as an office building until it reaches its full height of 160.5 meters (the 73rd floor of the actual building). the complex is 4.5 kilometers east of kyoto station. joya is a high-end restaurant located at the top of the kyoto tower (kenwood house) - a 5 star member of the relais & chateaux group. food is priced at around jpy 8000-24000 per person. its ambience is plush with marble everywhere. julius was sitting astride her when, once again, the dog made a double-decker noise outside. it was a comfortable noise, like the rustling of distant leaves. a tinny little sound. at the door she could see the pointed snout of a curiously styled white dog of the same species as julius's. he was short and thick-set, with a square head and red eyes which blinked once. he looked at her with no recognition as julius swung away from her, and held out a hand. "aba, aba-ababee!" he shouted happily at the dog. "i guess you are the gardener." the dog came gallantly, his tail wagging, his paws making little, shuffling noises on the carpet, sniffing all the while. he followed julius back to the sofa, sniffed his way over to kate's side and stood with his head bent close to hers, his eyes watching the girl intently.

walking up to the door of the beaux arts of a man is a familiar, a very familiar, a very puzzling experience, and therefore the sight of the bobby boots and the white gloves with which the servant had escorted me, though only a breath of astonishment, yet, in the first instant, i was as a flash struck, and then, quick as the arrow of light, all my thoughts followed me, my soul was on fire, my limbs were stiff, i sat down on a chair as if i had been shot. "good morning, mr. bancroft," said miss seward, coming forward and giving me both hands in her own. my blood was now too full of fire and too swift to take any other than a stupified sensation. i could not have risen had i desired it. i was mute, i could only look at her, and the thunder of my heart almost deprived me of the use of my eyes. i saw her come up, and i heard her say - "you will not be long in the house." there was, he found that evening, a better part of town. at 8:05 he knocked on the door of salmon chase's imposing three-story brick house at 6th and e streets and was admitted by a white manservant sporting gold braid and gold buttons on his jacket. when he walked into the elegant front parlor, he found several guests had already arrived. a tall young woman, graceful and elegantly dressed, came up and offered him her hand. it had to be kate chase, who as everyone knew acted as hostess for her thrice-widowed father. in the tradition of the previous generation of kyoto's hostesses, she and her father had designed a five-course meal for guests and servants alike to share. for his own part, he observed that the men were drinking heavily and that they were not speaking to the women. he noticed that one of the guests, a wan, boyish figure with his eyes on the younger girl, had already begun to drink. just at this moment the young japanese lady walked in with mr. arima, a foreigner who was one of her father's oldest friends and the only foreigner present. it was some time since they had met, and they exchanged greetings in japanese. when mr. arima saw bancroft, he came up to him, gave him a tip of his hat, and said, "korikura wa watashi ni otoshinagara."
