Vinyl Girl Wall Clock Rainmeter Skin If you enjoy our Vinyl Girl Wall Clock Rainmeter Skin, please consider rating it with the below.Q: Performance difference between box-shadow: 0px 0px 8px; and box-shadow: 0px 0px 3px; Is there any difference in performance between the two? I don't want to use my computer for nothing, and I need to set up a responsive website. box-shadow: 0px 0px 8px #000; and box-shadow: 0px 0px 3px #000; A: You can use browser's performance tool for this: For the box-shadow you're saying is in RGB (0,0,0), then the second one is slower because it needs to multiply each color by 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0 (it has $4 * 8 * 3 = 96$ factors to multiply by). However, because 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0 is easier to compute, it will take slightly less time to multiply. Because of this, the second one is always a bit slower to do than the first one. You should try to separate your styles by reusing the variables. For example, you could use: box-shadow: 0px 0px 3px \$oneColor; box-shadow: 0px 0px 3px \$oneColor, 0px 0px 3px \$oneColor; (I'm making a few assumptions about what \$oneColor is here, but this will do as an example). This way it will combine the two styles together, which should be faster to evaluate since it has fewer factors to divide by. Read more here. $\delta_{\pi, 1}$ denotes the Kronecker-delta. While the conditional variance of the random variable Y_1 can be decomposed into an expected term and a second-order term as $\sigma^2(Y_1 \mid \mathbf{X})$
